Construction & infra firms: Bad bets

These sectoral firms have been among the biggest wealth destroyers in the past 20 years

Mumbai, 30 January

ompanies in the construction and infrastructure sector have been among the biggest underperformers and wealth destroyers in the stock market in the past 20 years. The sector has also seen a wave of corporate failures and bankruptcies, making it tough for to make money on their investments. The numbers suggest that companies in the infrastructure sector go through a typical boom-and-bust cycle. First, there is a sharp rally in the share price as companies report rapid growth in revenues and profits, but then earnings growth loses steam, triggering a big sell-off in these stocks and a further decline in share prices that lasts for years.

For the poor showing by these companies, analysts blame high debt, poor return on capital and equity, and the inability of these firms to sustain growth and earnings when financial and macroeconomic conditions turn adverse.

Business Standard has analysed 10 infrastructure stocks that have

Gold prices rise as investors await Fed's stance on rate

Gold prices edged up on Monday on a weaker dollar, as investor attention moved to central bank meetings this week for clarity on their rate hike strategies, with key focus on the US Federal Reserve.

Spot gold gained 0.1 per cent to $1,928.36 per ounce. US gold futures were steady at $1,929.70.

"Gold is easing away from a nine-month high as the US dollar and yields stabilise, as markets eagerly await the Fed's latest policy guidance," said Han Tan, chief market analyst at Exinity.

The dollar was 0.2 per cent lower, making bullion, which is priced in the US currency, more attractive for customers holding other currencies.

As the Chinese economy continues to open up, there will be greater industry and luxury demand for gold, said Clifford Bennett, chief economist at ACY Securities.

Gold, which pays no interest, tends to benefit when interest rates are low. REUTERS
